

DAVID BADDIEL

FAME: NOT THE MUSICAL

Fame: we're obsessed with it, but who will talk honestly about what it's really like? DAVID BADDIEL, in his first full Edinburgh show for 15 years, does. From accidentally stealing the spotlight at Russell Brand's wedding, to realising Andrew Lloyd Webber thinks he's Ben Elton, DAVID BADDIEL examines his strange relationship with the New Lad / Token Jew / comedy rock'n'roller / football singer-songwriter persona he's co-existed with for 20 years.

DAVID BADDIEL BIOGRAPHY

DAVID BADDIEL is currently; adapting his smash-hit comedy The Infidel, which he wrote and produced, into a stage musical alongside ERRAN BARON COHEN, developing Sit.com, a pilot for Channel 4 which follows a technology-addicted family’s every-day life, and has created and will host a brand new format for BBC Radio 4, Don’t Make Me Laugh, challenging comedians to not get a laugh on inherently funny topics, which has been commissioned for a series next year. BADDIEL also has scripts in development with both Bwark Productions (The Inbetweeners) and Montecito Pictures (Up in the Air) in the US.

BADDIEL recently released his fourth novel, The Death of Eli Gold, following his three previously acclaimed titles. In 2010 he wrote the feel-good comedy and box office success The Infidel, starring OMID DJALILI, RICHARD SCHIFF, MIRANDA HART and MATT LUCAS, which has sold to over 20 territories internationally. Later that year he made his directorial debut with The Norris McWhirter Chronicles, a film for Sky 1 written and directed by DAVID BADDIEL, with appearances from ALISTAIR MCGOWAN, LEE MACK, JOHN THOMSON (The Fast Show, Cold Feet) and FRANK SKINNER with music by ERRAN BARON COHEN. In 2010 BADDIEL reunited with FRANK SKINNER to exclusively present a series of shows from the World Cup in South Africa for Absolute Radio, (which attracted over 3 million downloads).
